C'wealth drops City site plan

The Commonwealth Government will not redevelop a site which would have jeopardised the Sydney City Council's Wynyard pedestrian network plan.

The plan, centred on the Wynyard railway station concourse, seeks to provide traffic-free walkways for pedestrians.

The Department of the Interior and the Postmaster-General's Department had proposed to buy and redevelop a site now occupied by Philips Electrical Industries Pty Ltd.

They had advised the council that they could not allow public access through Commonwealth buildings.

The city council was told yesterday that the two departments had withdrawn their interest in the site.
