INFORMATION FOR CANDIDATES

The Department was established in 1948 following the creation of the Chair of Town and Country Planning - the first of its kind in Australia. The facilities and resources of the Department have now been developed to the point where a wide range of planning studies can be undertaken.

The education programmes currently offered are post-graduate. Students are accepted for enrolment from a wide range of disciplines and backgrounds including the sciences, the humanities and technology. Encouragement is given to specialisation within preferred fields of interest, but the main aim of the Department is to equip all students with the knowledge to enable them, after practical experience, to become competent professional planners.

The current education policy is directed towards establishing an understanding of the factors underlying the spatial distribution of man's activities and settlements. The political, social, economic and environmental aspects of this distribution are fully explored and students are expected to develop appropriate policies for a wide range of planning situations.

The Department offers a three year part-time course and a two-year full-time course leading to the Diploma or to the Degree of Master of Town and Country Planning. Suitable candidates are also accepted for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy of the University of Sydney. All courses are recognised by the Royal Australian Planning Institute and the Royal Town Planning Institute of the United Kingdom for corporate membership of these Institutes subject to the requirements for practical experience.

Approximately 150 students are enrolled in the different courses: all these are graduate students. A new Faculty Building has been approved and the Department should be able to move to its new accommodation in 1975 when its excellent Library will be more appropriately housed and adequate accommodation provided for staff, students and equipment.

The Planning Research Centre Within the University of Sydney

The Planning Research Centre was formed in November 1964 and depends on financial support from Government Departments, Local Authorities, Professional Institutions and private enterprise. The objects of the Centre are to advise the Senate of the University of Sydney and the Vice-Chancellor on matters associated with research within the Department of Town and Country Planning and particularly:

- (a) To collaborate with other Departments within the University of Sydney, or other Universities or appropriate institutions, in carrying out fundamental research into problems connected with physical planning and development.
- (b) To further the general understanding of the problems of urban and rural development by bringing together, in seminars, short courses and conferences, members of the business, professional and academic community.
- (c) To make better known, through lectures and publications, knowledge of the facts connected with urban and rural development for the assistance of those responsible at all levels of government, business and professional activity.

It is provided that the Professor of Town and Country Planning shall be the Director of the Centre.
